Declan,

From an Emergency Management view point I have nothing to add to my previous submission.

I would like to emphasise that the one area of concern that remains is there is no clearly identified mechanism to know what the inventory of material for incineration is, at any given time.

I would still like to see it a condition of the grant of licence that the compounds listed in the Annex to DIRECTIVE 2003/105/EC specifically item (c) the entry relating to 'CARCINOGENS' is enforced by requiring certification before these materials are brought on site. The same certification should be should be applied as in the case of an establishment where no individual substance or preparation is present in a quantity above or equal to the relevant qualifying quantities, so that the 'total amount' rule set out in the directive is applied.
